

About Lyndsey D’Arcangelo

- The Trouble with Emily Dickinson
- The Education of Queenie McBride

Release date for both books: 2012

Lyndsey D’Arcangelo is a freelance writer and an award-winning author who loves music, college basketball, baggy clothes, feel-good movies and the color blue. Basically, Lyndsey is an ordinary individual who strongly believes she can positively impact the world through her writing.

From Lyndsey: “Writing is something that I’ve always been good at. In fact, I fondly remember each and every writing camp I have ever attended growing up. Since graduating from Randolph-Macon College in 2000 with a BA in creative writing and English, I’ve been a high-school sports reporter, columnist, journalist, blogger, author, copywriter and web writer. My experience in advertising, journalism, higher education and the creative writing world has provided me with the knowledge and versatility to write for a variety of mediums.”

Besides these two books, Lyndsey has written A Three-Step Guide to Becoming a Published Author (2011); “Peas in a Pod,” a story in the anthology Chicken Soup for the Soul: Celebrating Brothers and Sisters (2007); She writes for Curve Magazine and has interviewed Megan Rapinoe, Jackie Warner and Martina Navratilova. She also blogs for Curve Magazine under the heading “Mr. Mom.”

For Publishing Syndicate, Lyndsey is planning a third book in her LGBT young adult fiction series about gay marriage, but she has yet to reveal which characters from the first two books will tie the knot! She is also working on a first-of-its-kind anthology for LGBTQ teens and young adults—My Story is Out.

Lyndsey lives in Buffalo, New York, with her wife and their one-year-old daughter. To learn more about Lyndsey, visit www.LyndseyDarcangelo.com.

To interview Lyndsey, contact Publishing Syndicate at Dahlynn@PublishingSyndicate.com.
www.PublishingSyndicate.com

